

The NFL and Allianz Arena are taking various actions to improve sustainability for the 2024 Munich Game:

- Reduced carbon: In partnership, Allianz Arena and the NFL are calculating and offsetting the carbon footprint for local operations on gameday.
 - Allianz Arena already achieves 100% renewable electricity by paying a premium to its power supplier to ensure investment in new renewable energy sources. Additionally, the stadium produces approximately 5% of its power on-site through solar arrays.
 - This year, the NFL is helping to expand these efforts, to also offset the carbon footprint for the food and merchandise sold on NFL gameday and the fuel used by fans for ground transport.
 - All carbon offsets will comply with the UN Sports Climate Action Framework, with the goal of eliminating carbon at the source in the future.
- Improved waste diversion: The NFL is working with Allianz Arena to further contribute to their work to reduce and divert waste.
 - Allianz Arena is actively working to reduce waste generated at all events. This includes minimizing single-use plastics and packaging, as well as implementing composting and donation programs to give food a second life.
 - Waste that cannot be avoided is diverted to a secondary use. The first priority is recycling and reuse of materials, followed by energy recovery. Allianz currently recycles over 70% of its waste and aims to host Net Zero Waste NFL games in the near future.
 - This year, the NFL is working hand in hand with the stadium on their existing efforts to maximize waste recycling. This includes resources to enhance existing sorting techniques and training for front-of-house staff to help educate fans.
- Strategic approach: This year, the NFL is developing a long-term sustainability strategy for their international games, to set clear goals and methods for how to expand efforts in future years, and align strategically with sustainability efforts across all of NFL's major events and venues.
 - Allianz Arena is committed to achieve net zero carbon balance by 2040 and other actions outlined in Allianz Arena's Sustainability Report. The stadium considers sustainability in all business and investment decisions.
 - The NFL and Allianz Arena both recognize that sustainability is a long-term investment and process and are committed to enhancing sustainability across future events.